What does the Cancer Vaccine Institute do?

The Cancer Vaccine Institute (CVI) was founded in 2000. It is the only national charity in the UK specifically funding research to find, develop and offer patients from around the country a better treatment for cancer through vaccines to increase survival rates. The ultimate aim is to develop vaccines that will slow or stop cancer spreading and even prevent it from coming back. Although vaccines are in their early stages, exciting progress has been made and many hundreds of patients have benefited through clinical trials. The CVI is currently funding the development of vaccines for malignant melanoma (the UK's fastest growing cancer) and will embark on vaccine projects for adolescent tumours, brain and breast cancers later this year. Vaccines are given as a regular injection and because they have no side effects allow the patient to lead a "normal" life while the body fights the cancer silently from within. Vaccines can be used as an alternative to conventional treatments such as chemotherapy and radiotherapy or in combination to boost their effectiveness and reduce side-effects.

The Friends of the Cancer Vaccine Institute (CVI) benefit from the knowledge that they are supporting the charity in the best way possible.
